THE SANE COURSE

Governor Moody failed to approve the bill passed by both houses of the Texas Legislature rebuking Mrs. 10:30-Mike & Herman; Gossip Hoover for inviting the wife of the 1 negro Congressman, Oscar De Priest, to a White House tea. Although the feelings of every Southerner must favor such a rebuke, there can be no 8:00-i.ske Michigan Travelogue doubt that the Governor's attitude is the sanest, when the interests of all concerned are considered.

This statement should not be in terpreted as endorsing Mrs. Hoover's action. For that matter Governor Moody very plainly lets it be known that he questions the wisdom of the President's wife. There can be no doubt that if she was animated in the action by a desire to improve the | 8:30-WOR Program relations between the races she is to be disappointed, because much ground already gained undoubtedly will be lost. The appearance of the negro woman at the tea party in itself would have stirred up much strife that would have lost ground gained in recent years toward the improve- 280.2-WTAM-WEAR Cleveland-1070 ment of the position of the negro race, but with Congressman De Priest seizing upon the occasion to launch | 10:00-Dance Music (1 8-4 hrs.) a bitter campaign it is almost impossible to calculate the harm that will be wrought.

Violence in the relations between the races has gradually occurred less frequently, but the natural reaction of the whites to De Priest's expressions is likely to make Itself felt in a return to the tendency of mob law. Anyone is pursuing a foolhardy policy by stirring up prejudices when they are almost forgotten, but De Priest is imperiously following a 10:00-Scores; St. Paul Musicians course that cannot fail to excite an healthful attitude among those of 6:00-Same as WOR (3 hrs.) his own race, and rekindle the fires of racial hatred among the whites. | 10:30-Musical Program

Strife does not offer the secret of improvement between the races.

PEACE DEMANDED

The New Orleans strike disorders rather forcefully demonstrate the waste of strife and the desirability of a peaceful means of settling difficulties between organizations of employes and modern employers. The strike and concomitant disorders, such as that which New Orleans has experienced, are holdovers from another age. They are wholly out of harmony with this age of industry and effi-

Strikes such as this are costly to both sides. Of course on the surface of the thing, it seems that the utility company involved in the street car strike is the chief loser so far. Still, however, the workers already have been denied thousands of dollars in salaries and there is no hope for an early settlement. Poverty doubtless will give way to acute want among the strikers before the difficulty will be finally settled.

This age must find a way to eliminate strikes just as the variety of interests and complexity of relations demands that the Nations find a way to avoid war. Destruction is waste that is wholly incompatible with the industrial area and the quicker the great minds of the nation find means of eliminating it all together the better it will be for all

"As a dirigible burns up its fuel it loses weight and to make up for this loss in weight, valuable helium gas has to be released at a cost of $1000 per flying hour. Please find some way to save this loss." to decipher them from the crisps?"

These are only a few of the riddles that have been put up to the Bureau of Standards since its founding in 1901 and, let it be added, solved by its corps of scientific men.

The signers of the Declaration of Independence, who authorized this institution by giving Congress the right "to fix the standards of weights and measures, little realized that a hundred years or so later men would be fastidiously measuring one one-millionth of an inch or how much a five-inch steel bar bends when your fingers are pressed against the ends.

Beyond a doubt they would have shouted "witchcraft," if they had been told that clever gentlemen would one day be "fixing standards" for measuring such elusive things as electric currents, sound, heat and light waves, air pressure and radium, and that out of these researches would come discoveries such as those hinted in the opening paragraph of this story.

Surely a modern Merlin presides over this House of Magic called the Bureau of Standards. What manner of man is he? The visitor might expect to find, among mysterious vessels and contraptions, some wizened old chap whose eyes reflect the mysteries of centuries. Instead he is ushered into a sunlit office, whose walls are lined with books and cases of commercial products, and heartily welcomed by a round-faced jovial fellow who might just as well be a doctor, business man or lawyer.

SCIENCE is a romantic adventure to Dr. George Kimball Burgess and he is a man in whom the sense of adventure is inborn. From his ancestors, staunch New England sea folk who helped make history in the days of the clipper ships, he inherited a thirst for the mysteries that lie beyond shadowy horizons.

He was born 55 years ago in Newton, Massachusetts. Physics became Dr. Burgess's greatest interest. He matriculated at the famous Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1892 and, in 1896, received his degree of Bachelor of Science. Years of study abroad followed and in 1901 he won his Doctor's degree at the Sorbonne, in Paris, being one of the first Americans to achieve this scholarly dise While going to school in Paris he spent his vacations in Germany, thus becoming fluent in two foreign languages and familiar with the scientific work of two great nations.

Paris warmed the heart of the young scientist and did much to mold his career. He used to visit the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, which fascinated him; but it is not difficult to imagine that other phases of Parisian life caught his interest, too. At any rate, he had not been in the city long when a French lass captivated him. The year he won his degree at the Sorbonne he won also Suzanne Babut as

Dr. Burgess spent his early professional years in teaching, first at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and later, upon his return from Europe, at the University of Michigan and the University of California.

He was in California when he learned that the Bureau of Standards, then a branch of the Treasury Department, was to be transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor and enlarged.

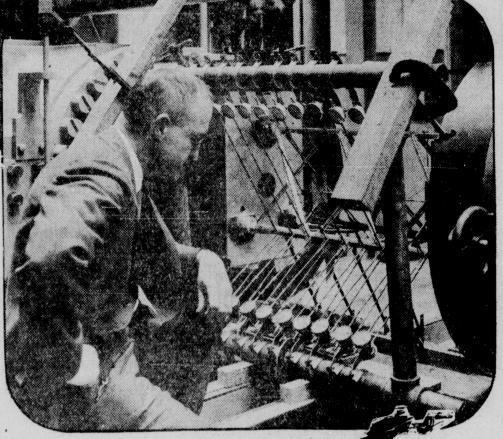

As he puts it, he "hot-footed it back to Washington" and took the examinations. In 1903 he was appointed an associate physicist, the twenty-third person to be employed.

TN 1913 he was placed in charge of the division of metallurgy and, after another 10 years, was named chief of the bureau upon recommendation by President Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce.

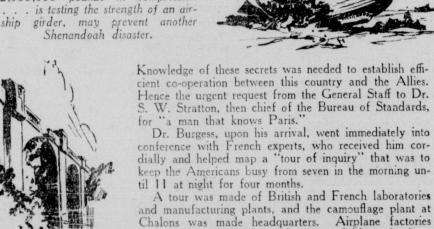

The bureau had expanded rapidly during those 20 years, as science made bold progress into fields hitherto undreamed. Today Dr. Burgess commands a corps of 900 employes and a plant valued at more than $6,000,000.

He directs the expenditure of an annual budget of over $3,000,000, money which represents a wise federal investment since the bureau saves the American government and American industry many times that amount, in addition to advancing research.

Dr. Burgess counts among the most interesting periods in his career the four months he spent in Europe immediately after this country had entered the World

Not many people realize it, but when the bugles had sounded the call to the colors, the scientists were among the first men mobilized. The entomologist, physicist, agriculturist, the engineer the chemist were assigned their duties early in the struggle, and the services they rendered were an important factor in bringing ultimate victory to the allied forces.

The first boat that cleared New York after war was declared did not sail as a transport. The Chicago, of the rench Bordeaux Line, bore across an ocean infested with U-boats, during a week in which the largest number of sinkings was recorded, a commission of seven scientists, headed by Dr. Burgess.

These men had been ordered to Paris at the request of the general staff and, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to make a survey of scientific war inventions in England and France and find out how other countries were using their scientific men.

The war had vastly stimulated scientific progress in both military and civilian fields and European countries held many secrets which had been carefully guarded from neutrals. (Copyright, 1929, NEA Magazine-Printed in U. S. A.) mission in splendid shape to advise American military experts. Dr. Burgess reported to General Pershing, then set out for home with a hatful of valuable ideas and suggestions. There were conferences and consultations with military experts and a bombardment of inquiries from commercial concerns that were trying to carry on in the face of shortages in supplies due to the conflict.

DR. BURGESS, like the other scientists in his party, had concentrated on his own particular field, metallurgy. The military plied him with questions regarding the characters of different metals with an eye to their best use in manufacturing war products; substitutes for various metals and alloys were demanded by both military and commercial men.

Enormous strides were made in the field of sound. A method was perfected to locate guns accurately by measuring the detonation. Photographic methods were improved; the bureau soon contributed, among other instru-ments, a lens that would enable airplanes to take pictures

Almost overnight, without a change of its personnel, the Bureau of Standards was converted to military uses. Whereas 85 per cent of its work had been in the civilian field and only 15 per cent in the military, it was now booming along, 90 per cent military and 10 per cent

It served as a producing plant as well as an experiment station. Among other products, 12 per cent of all the optical glass used in the war was made at the bureau.

Another result of Dr. Burgess's tour, was the sending of a French commission to this country and the establishment of a system of exchanging scientific information between Europe and the United States. When the International Aircraft Standards Bureau was established by technical representatives of Canada, France, Italy, the United States and Great Britain, Dr. Burgess was made a member. This group had as its object the unification of specifications and demands and paved the way to many valuable improvements in the field of aeronautical engineering.

THOSE were busy days for Dr. Burgess but, instead of experiencing a slump when the war ended, the work boomed along busily as ever, though the pressure was not so great. Inventions and discoveries that had filled war needs could be adapted to commercial uses and aviation remained a lucrative field for scientific experimentation. Out of the war great progress had come.

There was, for instance, the electron tube, in Dr. Burgess's opinion the most important war invention in the field of physics. It has made inter-continental telephone systems possible and the radio as we know it today.

In the field of aviation, a whole new set of instruments was developed for lighter-than-air craft and methods were devised to test the stress and strain upon the fabric used and indicate how tightly it could be stretched and what the pressure would be upon each girder! Radio beacons were invented and many other improvements were Being director of such a plant, quite obviously is a man-sized job and Dr. Burgess is kept on his toes all the time. In addition to keeping up with all the work going on at the bureau, he must maintain active contact with other departments of the government and with leaders in the manufacturing and commercial world.

E is chairman of the Federal Specifications Board, which unifies the purchase specifications of everything the government buys, except military supplies. He is chairman of the National Research Council, created by President Wilson to correlate scientific research during the war and continued since because of its usefulness. He serves as member of the North American Patrol Board and of the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics. He is chairman of the National Screw Thread Commission set up by Congress to standardize the sizes and tolerances of all screw threads used by the government. There are 80-odd committees of industrial men, technical experts in various fields, with which he keeps in touch.

Dr. Burgess loves travel and, since his student days, has made 10 or 11 trips to Europe on business and pleasure, or both. He keeps up with foreign research and is a member of leading scientific societies in the U.S. and abroad. But when he really wants to relax he chooses a great comfortable chair and—not a book on thermodynamics or physical constants—but a red-hot detective story or thriller, a volume of history or a novel.

YOUNG WOMAN ARRESTED IN TORCH MURDER

Tells Officers of Strangling Man to Death, Carrying Him to Automobile, Driving Him Into Country and Burning

Toulon, Ill., July 8.— (AP) —Laura Weaver, 21-year-old woman of great size and strength, was held today for the torch murder of her common law husband, Wilmer T. Kitselman, 52.

Six feet tall and weighing 230 pounds, the young woman told of strangling Kitselman, wrapping his body in a quilt, rolling it downstairs, lifting it into an automobile and driving into the country where she dumped it by the roadside, poured naptha over it and then touched a

After two hours questioning, the woman detailed the story of her affair with Kitselman and its ending. Her confession told of her growing disgust with Kitselman's drinking.

"He came to our room over the gambling house at Wyoming, Ill., Sunday morning, (June 30.)" the confession said. "He had bee drinking. He grabbed a chair and tried to strike me with it. # SOLONS TALK OF CAMPAIGN

Much Speculation Heard on Prospects for Candidates in Gubernatorial Race in Coming -Big Field of Candidates Looms.

Austin, July 8 .- (P)-While committees wrestle with uninteresting figures, the foot-loose Legislators, waiting impatiently for the financiers to get the appropriation bills in shape, like to speculate on next year's state political campaign. Format announcement of Senator Thomas B. Love of Dallas for Governor has added fuel to the flames, and everybody is counting on one of the most colorful campaigns Texas has ever witnessed. As the situation stands now there will be a field of eight or ten.

There are now five avowed candidates, Senator Love, Ascar B. Holcombe, former Mayor of Houston, Representative T. N. Mauritz of Ganado, advocate of an income tax, Miss Kacie Daffan of Ennis, historian and active in the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and E. G. Senter, cf Dallas, writer and lawyer. Some now in might get out. At the outset of every gubernatorial campaign there are announced candidates who decide later to pull down before the horses are led to the tape.

Lieutenant Governor Parry Miller is depended on by a large following to announce his candidacy in due time. Gossip circulating freely through the capitol has it that Earle B. Mayfield, former United States Senator, contemplates making the race. The same current of talk carries the rumor that if Senator Mayfield runs, former Governor Pat M. Neff of Waco will enter the field. Senator Mayfield and Governor Neff had quite a spat lately when the re-tiring United States Senator from Texas opposed the confirmation of for the governorship by speakers who the former Governor as a member of preceded him. the United States mediation board. # NEWin STYLE-SPEED. BEAUTY.

YOU'LL change all your ideas of what a washing machine should be when you see the new Haag 75 with the powerful 4-cycle gasoline engine (furnished also with 1/4 H. P. electric motor).

It is as far ahead of the average washer as the airplane is ahead of the donkey cart. It's a real worker-just fill it with soiled clothes, start the motor, and in 4 to 7 minutes everything is sweet. spotless, and unharmed.

You can't tell much about the new Haag 75 until you see it work in your home. We'll gladly demonstrate - without obligation, of course. When may we?
